

SAVE THE Red Pandas!

Red pandas are animals that live in the Eastern Himalayas, countries like Bangladesh and China. They live in big forests.

Red pandas are endangered because they are being poached for their thick colourful fur. Hats made of red panda fur are sometimes sold in some cold countries. Sometimes, red pandas also get caught in traps designed to catch other animals. Red pandas are also endangered due to habitat loss and deforestation. There are less than 10,000 red pandas left in the wild and the number is still declining rapidly.

So how can we help?

First, we can donate money to charities like WWF and Red Panda Network. You could also adopt a red panda. To help all animals, we can also stop buying products that contribute to deforestation.
